Blurred Lines

It seems to me that there is a clear line that separates the different but related building professions that was absent prior to the advent of the modern world. When I look at traditional Chinese and Japanese garden and architecture for example, it appears that, either the architecture, ID and Landscape proceeded out the same brain or that the design principles were so strongly embedded in the culture that it appears to come from the same brain.

Some of the work I do, allow me to explore the landscape as well as the Architecture and ID In those works I deliberately set about blurring the lines between the indoor and outdoor spaces. This approach has brought about a closer and more intimate relationship within those particular projects.
